The old-time fire-laddies who now call themselves the Volunteer Firemen's Association, dressed themselves up in their red shirts, black trousers and glazed hats yesterday, and starting for their headquarters, 143 Eighth street, with their decorated engines, hose carts, &c., proceeded to Brommer's Union Park, where they roasted an ox, had all sorts of games and danced until the hour bade them stop.

The games, which were the interesting first feature after their arrival at the park, included a hose-cart race for the old vets of Hose 31 and 13. Hose 31 was declared the winner and awarded the prize, a beautiful fire helmet for decorative purposes.

A race for men over fifty-five years of age was the next contest, and the silver and bronze medals for the winner were pinned to the breasts of H. Hedden and A. Liscomb. Prof. Dodworth started his music going for the boys in the evening, and although there were not many red shirts on the floor, the veterans had plenty of sons and daughters there who did dance while their fathers and mothers looked on from the tables, enjoyed

Four or five years ago a well-known up-town physician did a little favor for the New York Athletic Club members. While Lucky Baldwin was talking with the writer at a table in the Hoffman House cafe the other night the conversation was interrupted by a fellow California horseman come to beg the favor of a few bales of hay. California horses receive their nourishment from a peculiar food, perhaps as good if not as famous as Kentucky's bluegrass. It is out and wheat hay and has never known rain. Even Eastern-bred horses will pick out the California fodder from the best timothy, no matter if well mixed in the manger. California horses would have to be starved into eating anything else. THE RUSH TO THE "FUTURITY."

Just think of 60,000 people attending an event that involved a journey by boat and rail of at least thirty miles; the rush on and the rush off the boat; the rapid packing of railroad cars; the de-barkation and then the return trip, and all this with nothing much happening more serious than the wrenching of an cloow; think of all this, and an idea will be had of the manner in water a great mass of people was handled in the trip to and from flow did they get there, and how did they get

How did they get there, and how did they get away? It looked like rather a difficult question in the morning. There had been big races at Sheepshe did before, and everybody had not been satisfied with the transportation facilities. Improvements were made it is rue, for when the great Shourdan was run in June, every person who wished could be on his way home within forty-five minutes after the day's sport was over. Here was aracing event, however, that threatened to attract more people than even the Suburban, and preparations were made accordingly, and nobody was hurt, and everytody-except the losers—was happy.

Thuse people who siways stand in front of a theatre from 5 o'clock in the afternoon until the doors open, and then rash as mady as though the house were packed, came first as usual. For the most part they crossed on the Thirty-fourth street ferry to Long Island City and took the Long Island Haliron. They had lunch baskets and turf guides and private tips, and they got very good seats, which they descrited in their excitement later in the day when they needed them most. A few were there at 10.30 o'clock, and quite a respectable little knot came along at 11. About noon the 1-al rosh of the day began. Merchants and bankers and men about town, in fact everybody whose business called them downlown during that part of the day, patronized the four boats that ran from the foot of Whitehall street to Bay Ridge. Before I o'clock the street in front of the ferry house was blocked up with men, women and children. The enterprising gentry who had purchased grand stand tickets on "apec" did a thriving trade in consequence at an advance of 25 cents on each ticket. The boats were loaded, and when not another creature could be squeezed in the bell sounded, the whistle tooted and away they went. At 1.30 o'clock in crowd was still greater, and half an event of the day was nearly ready, there seemed to be just as many people clamoring for tickets as there and been an hour before. It is estimated that at least twenty thousand form and unmercifully chaffed three spindles shanked young men who carried walking-sticks that appeared to equal their own legs in circumference.

"Dear girls," said the old lady, beaming on them over her spectacles, "they will have their joke, All so strong and big, you know. Have been horsewomen ever since they were knee-high to a grasshopper. Those two dark girls are from Washington. That one with the red cheeks and white teeth is a Western girl. She can ride abroncho with tae best of them. The other two belong here in New York. None of them has ever seen a norse race before, and they are jeast crarg over it." The "dear girls" were so full of lie and laughter, and shot attack rogulah glances at the slender youths, and said such cutting things that the young men retured to the further end of the platform, where they were out of nearing. Between ten and fifteen thousand people went by thus route. The Brighton Beach road carried ten thousand people went by thus route. The Brighton Beach road carried ten thousand people will be a big one, and a thousand more.

Sept. Barton, of the Long Island road, had foreseen that the catolite to accommodate the throng. Thanked to the Long Island ord, had foreseen that the catolite to accommodate the throng. The strong of the long Island road, had foreseen that the catolite to accommodate the throng. The strong of the long Island for the long Island took, when the water's edge, a train of sevenemen cars was made up. Two englues were required to move it, and 1,700 people filled it. Another train of fifteen ears followed with a powerful engine. Thirteen under ergous were peaked as close as brothers in the seats, on the steps and hanging from whatever projection they could find finger-room. Those who came by the Brighton Beach route were content to pack themselves in the same way, and dart's which, it will be remembered, was produced at the Poople's Theatre last season, to Miss Portonaled to the route. People kept coming as late the great even to 'the day had been decided. After the end of the route. People kept coming as late as 3 o'clock, and there was actually haif a carload after the great event of the day had been decided. After the third race was over those far-seeing soils who had come early to get good seats group their places so that they would be in a position to make a dash for the train the moment the Futurity Stakes were run. Of course they didn't see a bit of the race, for the great aurging crowd was so dense that it was impossible to get a glimpse of the track once the stand was deserted. As soon as Proctor Knott was known to be the winner the rush began. A vast number were content to give up seeing the race itself for the sake of casning in their bets first, and they were the first on the run to the train. The same system of fitteen minutes between trains was observed as in the earlier part of the day. At least seven thousand people decided to put in a full day of it and go to Manhattan Beach. Those who did not care to see the fifth and sixth races were quickly put aboard and started for Long Island City, Brooklyn and Bay Ridge. A large proportion remained to make the work of "loading up for home" a comparatively easy tast.

His performance, Macari, in "Called Back," was also a characterization that won him renown. In "The Private Secretary" it was he who introduced the catch-phrase "Do you know," and other changes suggested by him made the success of the play. Beerhohm Tree has several times negotiated for American engagements. Something has always happened to prevent the fruition of his desires. "BOCCACCIO" AT WALLACK'S.

Little Miss Laura Moore, daintily clad in palest pink and wearing a long Marguerite plait of golden hair in charming pendulosity, soon won her way into the affections of the large audience at Wallack's last night, more by reason of her pretty demureness than by the volume or quality of her soprano tones. Col. McCaull's latest acquisition has a small, pure voice, which she knows how to use to the very best advantage. It is highly cultivated and extremely agreeable.

Miss Moore is weak dramatically. She begun her evening's work in 'Boccaccio" with just a suspi-cion of a French accent and a Theo-like manner. These she fortunately discarded later on, and was her own refined, plessing little self.

"Boccaccio" made a great hit. The full strength of Col. McCauli's admirable company was displayed. Miss Marian Manola did the best work she has ever done in this city in the title role. As the country boy, in the second act, she was simply admirable. Throughout the performance her artistic methods and tuneful voice delighted the au-De Wolf Hopper was funny, but there is a limit

BARRIGAN's.

There was a great "time" at Harrigan's Park Theatre hast night. The popular manager opened his season at the house where he is so well appreciated, by the production of a new play which he has called "Waddy Googar." The play deals with the fortunes of a metropolitan hackman and his wife and the life of an Italion girl whom they have adopted. It is full of local color, which, of course, includes a great deal of political talk. There are some cleverly drawn characters in the play, and Mr. Harrigan almostl, as Waddy Googan, contributes as much to the success of the enter-talament as ever. Four songs by Dave Brahsm are introduced. They are not as good as Mr. Braham has led us to expect his efforts should be. Mrs. Yeamans as an Irishwoman, was remarkably fung. funny.

WINDSOR THEATRE.

"Around the World in Eighty Days" pleased a large audience at the Windsor last night so well that recalls followed nearly every act. The play is not so magnificently "spectacled" as Mr. Kiralfy was wont to have it, but several of the scene effects were quite striking. The company includes W. J. Fleming, the original Phuess Fogg.

W. J. Fleming, the original Phiness Fogg.

BIJOU OPERA-HOUSE.

The Bijou Opera-hiouse, newly decorated and looking very bright and beautiful, was opened last night under the management of Mr. J. W. Rosen-quest, and a large andience gathered to see Mr. Roland Reed in David D. Lloyd's successful comedy, "The Woman Hater." The play is very funny and it was effectively played by Mr. Reed and his company. At the end of the third act the actors were called before the curtain and a big floral horseshoe was presented to Mr. Reed. The comedian acknowledged the cordial greeting he received in a willy speech which caused almost as much laughter as the comie situations in the play.

"The Woman-Hater" is booked for a probably successful run of four weeks.

Soon after Cecil arose to take his leave.
Emily accompanied Cecil to the door—a lover's privilege. With terrible anxiety, Maud awaited some sign that the reptile had done its work.

"Ah!"

The half-suppressed exclamation reached her where she sat, and she trembled in every limb. It was Cecil's voice, and she fancied the death-blow had been struck!

"What was the matter, Emily? I heard Mr. Firmstone utter a cry of pain." she said, when her cousin re-entered the room.

At a later hour she left the room, went to his hand, poor fellow. He assured me to was and flashed scinuliant in the microscide, but it was but it was but it was but; was nearested hereively. I hope it will not produce a swifter death than that," replied Emily.
